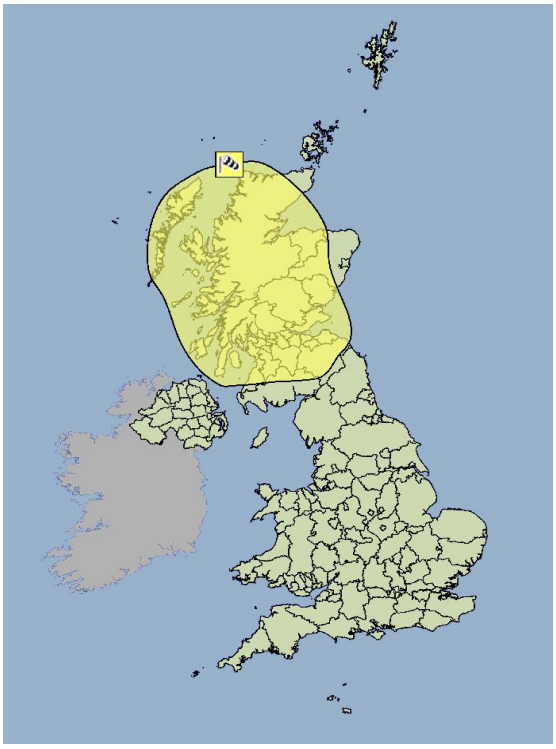
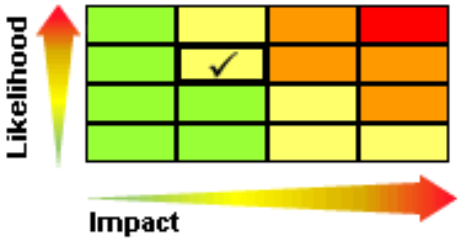
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
A relatively deep area of low pressure moving slowly eastwards between Scotland and Iceland on Sunday before becoming centred over the Norwegian Sea on Monday will bring a period of windy weather to Scotland on Sunday and Monday. Whilst the magnitude of the expected gusts on Sunday are not exceptional for the region, in view of the increased outdoor activity at this time of year there is a slightly greater likelihood of disruption from these winds than would otherwise be the case. This has informed the decision to issue a warning. The strongest winds are expected to be across northern and northwestern Scotland, but some locally strong gusts are still possible even across southeastern Scotland, particularly over and to the lee of hills.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Wind

Valid from 05:00 on Sun, 07th Aug 2016 until 23:55 on Sun, 07th Aug 2016

A period of strong winds, including gales over the far north and northwest of Scotland, is expected to affect Scotland on Sunday. Gusts of 50-60 mph are expected over the far north and northwest Scotland and 40-50 mph over other parts of Scotland. These strong winds will also generate very rough sea conditions near north and northwest Scotland. Please be aware of the potential for localised disruption to travel and outdoor activities.
